

Artist Ilene Sova Uses Her Skills to Help Find Missing Women

A mother, niece, sister, aunt and any other female relative and friend has a special spot in each of our hearts. It is an unimaginable experience that too many people have to go through – when one of these women go missing.

Ilene Sova is an Ontario artist who was inspired by the disturbing way missing women are dealt with by both the police and the media. She has started to paint large-scale portraits of all the women who went missing in Ontario between 1970 and 2000. Sova is doing extensive research into each woman to gain knowledge of their personality, in order to properly represent them

With the hope of enriching and fostering discussion on violence against women, Sova plans to tour to various locations across Ontario with this exhibition.
